

Dear candidate,

As a voter in the General Election in the constituency in which you are a parliamentary candidate, I am writing to ascertain your position on women's rights.

Girls and women's rights are a vital responsibility of any government. Can I rely on you to ensure that my rights and those of my family are protected in:

- Single sex toilets and changing facilities
- Single sex protection for women in prison and refuges
- Single sex sports
- Same sex care in hospital, home and care settings
- The provision of factual, age appropriate sex education that does not confuse children

Like many women, I have watched with dismay as public institutions and local authorities, have dismantled basic safeguarding principles in the name of an ill-defined concept of inclusivity. Gender ideology has been introduced unchecked into the civil service, the NHS, schools and other services, without proper scrutiny or equality impact assessments being undertaken. Data collected by the police and the judiciary records gender rather than biological sex. Women and girls expecting single sex services are confronted by men in their changing rooms, refuges and hospital wards.

The privacy, dignity and safety of women and girls is at risk in the prevailing climate, and I hope I can trust in your support to ensure those rights will be safeguarded. I write to ask how you, as my elected representative, would do that, and I hope I can rely on your support. Should you choose not to respond, I will assume that this is not a priority for you, and I will cast my vote accordingly.

I look forward to hearing from you.

Yours etc.
